A WORD FROM THE CHANCELLOR

There is mounting and clearly incontrovertible evidence that the quality of human resources or human capital available to a nation is directly related to the productivity, economic growth and real development experienced by that nation.

From development history, we know that wherever education goes, there goes civilization. Knowledge is not just the new currency of the world, it has always been the currency whose strength and relevance determines the prosperity of any nations.

The quality of human resources available for developing a nation depends on the quality of education and 'skill creation' that the nation's educational resource base makes available. Economists have developed a variety of models and ideas to explain differences in growth rates among countries, invariably featuring the importance of human capital.

The reason for this should not be farfetched, in that a qualitatively educated society will provide creative approach to productivity, resulting in higher rates of innovation, and engender higher levels of development.

The major reason why many African economies are failing to meet primary developmental aspirations is due to the dearth of innovative and productive knowledge base.

Education has proved to be a most veritable vehicle for national transformation in human history. No nation ever rises above her investment in quality education. A former Prime Minister of Ireland was once asked; "how did your nation come out of her economic ills"? He answered: "Education! More Education!! And more Education!!!"

This is why Covenant University remains committed to leading a revolution in Education by offering the quality of education that can match what any other nation may offer her citizenry. The vision of Covenant University as an institution was born out of a passion for change.

That is why we have always claimed that Covenant University is not just an institution of higher learning but indeed a revolution in education. I believe that until one's mind is renewed life cannot be practically transformed.

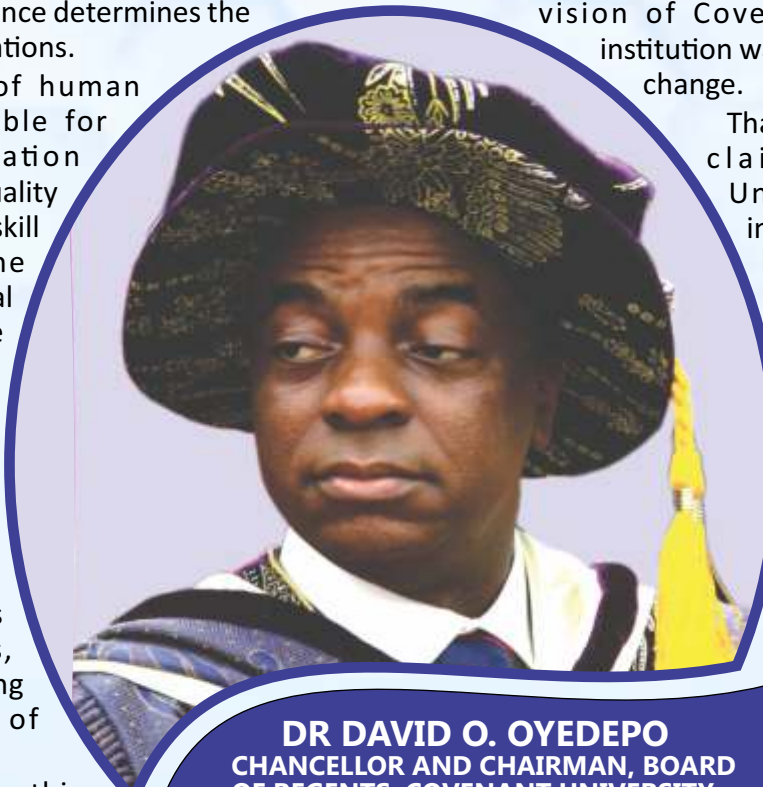

'Rebuilding' must begin with 'rethinking'. It is possibility thinkers that turn out to be great reformers. I also believe that sound education is the sure foundation of every great nation.

We therefore do not need just education, we desperately need the right kind of education, raising the right kind of leaders, promoting the right kind of values and graduating the right kind of students, to bring about quality and transformational changes that this part of the world desperately requires today.

This is our number one and avowed commitment here in Covenant University.

On this note, you are welcome to Covenant University's Release of Eagles 2020.
